Not illustrated. 1900 Excerpt: .fully fifty wagons and a scattered cavalry guard, which, in its mad career, had marked its route so far northward, with wrecked wagons, exhausted horses and mules, and an occasional contraband driver overcome with heat and fear. When these frightened teamsters reached Chambersburg they were checked in their precipitous flight by a few cool-headed men, and, after stopping long enough to realize the absurdity of their conduct, and to understand that they were creating a useless panic among the people, they proceeded in a more orderly manner in the direction of Carlisle. The advance guard of Lee s army. Monday, June 16th, evening. June 16th. A backward movement. Waynesboro visited. June 21st. Note 61. The General vance. June 22d. The cavalry command of Brigadier General Albert G. Jenkins was the advance guard of Lee s army. Advancing from Hagerstown, it entered Pennsylvania by way of Greencastle and Chambersburg. These forces held possession of the last-named place for several days, and, besides his foraging operations in the neighborhood. Jenkins destroyed the bridge spanning the Conococheague creek at Scotland, on the line of the Cumberland Valley railroad, thus giving the first disabling stroke to that important means of communication between Harrisburg and the southern border of the State. At length Jenkins, menaced rather more by reports of advancing Federal troops than by the material forces themselves, withdrew his command to the vicinity of Greencastle, and from that point despatched again his bands of raiders in every direction. The...
