This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - Seminar paper from the year 2000 in the subject English Language and Literature Studies - Literature, grade: 1,7 (A-), University of Hamburg (Anglistics Seminar), course: Seminar 1b, 7 entries in the bibliography, language: English, abstract: The Short Story On Saturday Afternoon by Alan Sillitoe is a highly complex piece of literature. It does not merely represent the description of the experiences the narrator has made on one Saturday afternoon but it contains far more: It implies information about the social system the speaker lives in, his family background and his psychology. It would therefore not be very appropriate to make use of only one of the approaches that have so far been developed in order to interpret literature. Thus, in the case of this story it is not the question whether the reader should relate the author's biography to the text, consider its intertextuality or try to interpret the text on the basis of its words alone¹. For some stories it may be possible to pose and answer this question clearly, but with respect to On Saturday Afternoon it is not. Here a mixture of different methods offers the best access to the text because it covers more aspects of the story than one single approach does. Consequently, in this term paper I am going to deal with the Short Story On Saturday Afternoon by Alan Sillitoe considering the following aspects: The contents of the story, its inner structure and its relation to Sillitoe's biography and some of his other works. In doing so I am aware of the fact that it is necessary and inevitable only to focus on certain aspects of the...
